BOOK SYNOPSIS

Harper I was perfectly content with my life. My career was booming. I traveled. I did as much charity work as I possibly could for the homeless, and I was perfectly happy with the choices I made. At least...I was--until my sister, Dani, came up missing. As an international correspondent, she traveled to war-torn countries, and she'd stepped a little too far over the line. With my sibling kidnapped and running out of time, I had no option except to approach Marcus Colter for help. Seeing Marcus again after having him break my heart over a decade ago wasn't easy, but to my relief, the old feelings I thought I might still harbor for him were completely gone. He was like a stranger to me. After meeting with him, my only emotion was gratitude that he was going to try to rescue my sister. Before I could relax about feeling nothing for Marcus, I met Blake Colter, and realized every emotion I thought I'd have for Marcus was suddenly present for the gorgeous US senator. It was ridiculous. I hadn't seen Blake since we were kids. How could I have given myself to Marcus so many years ago, yet have these feelings for his twin brother, Blake? The more time I spent with Blake, waiting for my sister to be rescued, the more confused I became about my attraction to him. Then, my entire world came crashing down when I found out that everything I thought was true for over a decade wasn't the truth at all. What happens when a woman finds out that a man she'd both loved and hated for over a decade never really existed at all?
